/24-7PressRelease.com/ - February 4, 2005 - Columbus, OH - Recently announced price hikes at Ebay, have caused members in the online auction business to think twice about listing on Ebay. Ebay has decided (after failing to meet their projected earnings for 2004) to raise their prices. Some fees are increasing as much as 60%.

For some members like Bob Lee, who is a power seller on Ebay listing video games, the profit margin will decrease enough after the price hikes to keep him from listing. "The profit margin on new video games is extremely low for small retailers. With the price increase, Ebay will make more of a profit off the games I sell than I will. It just isn't worth it," says Bob Lee.

In response to the increases at Ebay, Bob Lee created a website to help other sellers find alternatives to Ebay at www.powersellersunite.com. The site is designed to encourage others to use alternative online auction sites such as overstock.com and onlineauction.com. "The website is set up to help others who want to sell their items online. There are lots of auction sites out there and we are trying to gather them in one place. Sellers can add their online stores to our storefront section for free so other users can browse your shops, the only exception is that the link can't be a eBay storefront," states Lindsey Christ, a former seller on Ebay who is helping to moderate the site.

In less than a week, over 10,000 people have visited the site demonstrating the growing frustration with Ebay and the monopoly they have on the online auction business. The site is calling for a Boycott on eBay from Feb. 18-25, 2005 in protest of the price increase, which goes into effect on Feb. 18th. For more information, visit www.powersellersunite.com.
