Are we heading for the world of the beast? Says Robin G Howard, science fiction author from Margate, Kent. U.K.
New science fiction book third in series of Jim Long space agent. Author Robin G howard has a small world cult following.

/24-7PressRelease/ - ENGLAND, UK, August 10, 2005 - The moral laws' of the world hold democracy together but if the beast were to gain power all this would change. Murder, rape, sexual deviations, suicide, torture and all other aberrations would prevail. Television ratings would soar as sex and bloodlust audiences crave for more. Gladiatorial television would emerge with the strongest killing the strongest and wild animals devouring the weak in front of a mass audience. Vast audiences would press their red buttons to determine who lives and dies. The beast in man and woman would be released, destroying all around them in an orgy of fanatical thoughts and deeds.

Is this the beast that the world holy books and prophets try to warn us against - the Devil? Is all that is evil and good in every living human being? History warns us that this may be so. Children brought up in a bestial environment can become monster adults of the future and yet still have the choice to do good or evil. If a whole country is governed by the state of the beast many will fight against with morality and honesty. As in a country with strong laws and moral character - the beast will emerge, a more cunning beast, hiding and running. We can only hope that we never have to experience the world of the beast, for in every person is an angelic and demonic persona created in our genes and DNA from our parents and grandparents going back to the beginning of physical man. If the demonic persona in man and woman emerges and prevails, we shall all be in the time of the beast. Now we think we are civilised but are we ultimately heading for this black and evil world of the future.
