DHTML menu / JavaScript menu builder - AllWebMenus v4.1 released!

A new version of the popular DHTML menu maker AllWebMenus has been released - New interface and powerful features!

/24-7PressRelease/ - August 27, 2005 -- Likno Software is proud to announce the launch of its latest version AllWebMenus version 4.1, the most versatile system available for your web site navigation needs. We have created an optimized version of this program and the new version brings you a rejuvenated program with a full set of new features and properties, which make cross-browser menu-making easier for the professional and amateur web developer.

AllWebMenus resolves all existing DHTML incompatibilities across the major DHTML-enabled browsers (IE, Firefox, NS, Opera, Mozilla, Safari, Konqueror, etc.) and offers peace of mind to the professional web developer by producing truly cross-browser navigation menus. This process is transparent to the web developer who enjoys the design of cool navigation menus without bothering for the technicalities lying behind their creation.

AllWebMenus was introduced and became popular because of the easy and friendly manner in which users can create menus through an intuitive WYSIWYG technique.

In the new version 4.1 the graphics user interface has been re-designed to accommodate the new features. The most striking one is a new advanced positioning technique that offers greater flexibility, when placing a menu on a webpage. Specifically the user is now able to work also with only part of a menu (called 'Submenu Group'). Furthermore the process of attaching a menu (or part of it) to any page element has been simplified, which offers more options for creating impressive menu designs. A new command has been added that creates sitemap files according to the specifications of the latest introduced "Google Sitemap".

You can create eye-catching web menu designs and save them as "Themes", which you can later apply to other projects.

Among the new features found in AllWebMenus version 4.1 are:

- New advanced positioning techniques for greater flexibility.
- Advanced support for automatically showing submenus above Form or Flash objects without the need of extra code.
- Optimized Integration with Likno Web Button Maker.
- Enhanced Image Gallery.
- Upgraded / Optimized compatibility with different browsers.
- Bug fixes from previous version.
