World's First Cyber Revolution is Brewing: OnlineAuction.com Gains Momentum

The reaction of online sellers and buyers to recent industry changes has led to strong growth at OnlineAuction.com, an innovative auction site based in the Pacific Northwest.

/24-7PressRelease/ - GRANTS PASS, OR, February 21, 2008 - Due to recent changes by industry giant eBay, people are flocking to OnlineAuction.com (OLA) like never before. "Our credit card processing service had a hard time keeping up with us," said Chris Fain, CEO of OnlineAuction. He continued, "This is like a mass exodus from our largest competitor. I've never seen anything like it."

Recently Fain was interviewed by CNN/Fortune about the online seller rebellion. "...there's a huge window of opportunity," he acknowledged. To read more of this interview:

OLA is enjoying a significant gain in the number of registered users and items listed. The company's growth and the support and enthusiasm of new users on the site is energizing says Fain. He continues, "The site is gaining huge traction in the online auction market place and there is exponential growth occurring right now."

Recently, OLA posted their Declaration of Cyber Independence. To view this and a personal message from OLA founder and CEO Chris Fain:
