Cambridge Who's Who Honors Frank Jugo for Mastering Multiple Aspects of Automotive Engineering

Mr. Jugo, senior plant engineer of General Motors, specializes in robotics and computer and PLC integration.

/Cambridge Who's Who/ - Bossier City, LA, April 15, 2008, Frank Jugo, senior plant engineer for General Motors, has been recognized by Cambridge Who's Who for his achievements and versatility in automotive robotics.

Mr. Jugo was inspired to become involved in the automotive industry after interning at General Motors in 1999. In his role as senior plant engineer, he specializes in robotics and computer and PLC integration. Mr. Jugo has utilized his time at General Motors to hone several techniques including logic programming, painting and sealer robotics, human interface touch screen graphics, program development, vision camera sensor and offset program calculation, electrical circuitry drafting, and managing controls for paint shop sealer processing.

The support Mr. Jugo receives from his family and his team members drives him to succeed. General Motors sponsors ongoing education, helping to keep employees like Mr. Jugo at the head of his field. One of the most current issues facing automobile manufacturers is the demand for environmentally friendly vehicles to lessen the United States' oil dependency.

Mr. Jugo has a bachelor of science in electrical and computer engineering from Oklahoma State University and is a member of the General Motors Professional Manager Network, Eta Kappa Nu, the Electrical and Computer Engineering Honor Society and the Society of Hispanic Professional Engineers.
