New Addiction Help To Be Provided Over The Internet

Finally, addicts have an easier way to obtain the help they need with their addiction problem.

/24-7PressRelease/ - NORTH MIAMI BEACH, FL, April 21, 2008 - A resource has unveiled a free knowledge base for hopeful or recovering addicts. The resource, Addiction.cc, has become a staple in the addiction help industry.

In response to competitors who charge addicts money for valuable addiction help, Addiction.cc instead offers the content free. Such generosity has propelled the website ahead of competing informational websites. Addiction.cc prides itself in creating a free community resource in which anyone with an Internet connection can take part in.

Perhaps most helpful among the slew of features that launches with the web resource is the fact that visitors can subscribe to what is called an RSS feed. This "feed" is a simple tool that allows readers to be updated when new addiction or recovery information comes out. As new addiction treatments come to light, it would be useful for addicts to subscribe to this feed so they are the first to know.

The website even goes as far as providing readers a way of communicating with other users. Under an intriguing comment system, addicts or recovered addicts can share and help each other in ways they previously couldn't. Such functionality is vital for addicts to mingle and help each other in the struggle.

In regards to future developments, the resource at Addiction.cc seeks to improve their knowledgebase and to further extend their helpful resources to addicts looking for bias-free help. For addicts who are looking for help in their specific area, whether it be drugs or alcohol, the prospect of expansion gives such addicts of all types a better way to seek help.

Addiction.cc was created to help addicts recover from substance abuse. The free resource allows anyone with an Internet connection get valuable tips and information in addiction treatment.
