Reconditioned G5 Mac Sales On The Rise

Small Businesses are saving money by choosing reconditioned Power Mac G5 computers over newer models.

/24-7PressRelease/ - TAMPA, FL, April 26, 2008 - With spending tight across the economy, small businesses are choosing reconditioned Apple computers over more expensive newer models. Small design shops in particular are adding affordable Power Mac G5s to ensure consistency as they add employees or replace older equipment.

While the release of Apple's newer Intel processors has allowed more consumers and businesses to embrace the Mac, the core group of design professionals that has used Macs for years still finds value in the G5 processor models. According to Michael Snyder, president of Mac of All Trades, "The Power Mac G5 is a very powerful machine. Creative professionals can easily run the latest version of Mac OS X: Leopard, and have huge expansion capabilities for additional memory, storage, and add-on cards."

Most small businesses do not have the budget for cutting-edge computer hardware. Though Apple computers are more affordable than ever, many business owners are saving money by choosing reconditioned G5 Macs that are still by all measures very powerful computers.
