/24-7PressRelease/ - ASH FORK, AZ, May 06, 2008 - Raising money for your charitable foundations is always a challenge. Almost every major corporation based in the United States does its best to be a good citizen in its community by raising money for the growing needs of the communities they serve.

Now with the bulging gasoline prices, businesses are hurting and new ways need to be developed to help companies' raise money for their charitable foundations. Employees are becoming too strapped by rising costs to keep contributing to all of their favorite charities.

Wayne F. Perkins, the Stress Annihilator, offers each company a unique way to fund its foundation and at the same time offer a service that will help employees and clients a program to annihilate stress at work.

Perkins offers Stress Annihilation programs both in person and delivered by audio CD. These are designed to help employees or clients eliminate stress so they can be more productive and enjoy their jobs, in spite of high prices for gasoline and food.

Wayne donates a portion of each booking or audio CD sale back to the company's foundation. Wayne helps reduce the stress associated with the sacrifice of giving and living within a looming recession.
