Whitman's Political Move Inspires You Tube Contest Encouraging Scorned Ebay Users to Rise Up

In support of the May 1st global Ebay boycott, the battle leader famous for auctioning off the Golden Gate Bridge on Ebay is at it again. The tactical media artist, simply known as GMAJORSPRESENTS has launched a video contest on You Tube.

/24-7PressRelease/ - NEW YORK, NY, May 09, 2008 - With the Presidential Race becoming more interesting by the second, the addition of former Ebay dominatrix, Meg Whitman to John McCain's campaign efforts has even the most loyal Republicans scratching their heads in disbelief. Yes it appears that even Republicans have bought and sold on Ebay and perhaps they too have been adversely affected by the recent policy changes.

In support of the May 1st global Ebay boycott, the battle leader famous for auctioning off the Golden Gate Bridge on Ebay is at it again. The tactical media artist, simply known as GMAJORSPRESENTS has launched a video contest on You Tube. The contest celebrates our right to free speech and can incorporate any art form or genre imaginable. The contest was designed as an outlet for individuals to share their experiences and spotlight the devastating effects Ebay has had on those left behind when the new policies took hold.

The winner will be decided by most viewed with a $1000.00 cash prize if Obama wins and a $999.00 cash prize if McCain wins up for grabs. The video is to be put on You Tube the weekend of June 19th to 21 submitted under "Artists for Change". The winner will be picked on E-day 2008.

"The new CEO Mr. Donahue says he is embarrassed by Ebay and calls it a flea market. Apparently the new policy changes are Ebay's way of saying thank you to a workforce they have had for free and have profited billions from. My contest will help give the American public a voice and perhaps shed some light on Meg Whitman and those she chose to support" says GMAJORSPRESENTS.

GMAJORSPRESENTS predicts he will attract 30 to 50 million viewers by E-day!
