/24-7PressRelease/ - NEW DELHI, INDIA, July 19, 2008 - RNCOS has recently added a new Market Research Report titled, "China Healthcare Sector Analysis" to its report gallery. The report provides a detailed account of the factors that define the structure and composition of the healthcare market in China and leading to its growth.

The research study gives detailed statistical and analytical review on demographics, macroeconomic indicators, disease profile, healthcare services market, pharmaceutical market, medical device market, key drivers and restraints. It contains excellent information that will help clients to draw up market strategies and assess opportunity areas in China's healthcare market.

Key Findings

- Total healthcare spending in China is expected to grow robustly at a CAGR of 11% between 2007 and 2012.
- Around 118 Million people are expected to be above 65 years of age in China by 2012, thereby increasing the prevalence of several chronic diseases.
- The middle class bracket is projected to have 160 Million people by 2012, reflecting a higher spending on healthcare and opportunities for healthcare companies.
- The prevalence of insurance is low in China with around 50% of all healthcare payments still being paid out of pocket.
- Most hospitals present in China lack the resources and staff to provide specialized treatments. However, with increasing private investments, the scenario is improving.
- There is a wide gap in the quality of healthcare being provided at the rich eastern provinces and poor rural provinces.
