Blacksmith Forges Ahead With Wrought Iron Campfire Pokers

The timeless trade of Blacksmithing can still be witnessed in Bill Jenkins' blacksmith shop. As the owner of his business, Blackiron Jewels, he will be the first to tell you how rewarding it is to fill the demand for his wrought iron campfire pokers. And his creative designs will attest to this.

LANSING, MI October 05, 2008 /24-7PressRelease/ -- Bill says campfire pokers are one of his favorite items to create. Many people order them to give as gifts, as well as their personal use. Hand forged wrought iron is a unique gift idea because each item is one of a kind.

Every campfire needs to be maintained safely and with the 48" maximum length of the campfire pokers, this task is well at hand. Shorter versions can also be ordered for indoor use at a fireplace or wood-burning stove. A wrought iron campfire poker will last a lifetime when used properly.

Campers love them because they are durable, unique and make a great conversation piece at the campfire. They no longer have to forage through the woods or the campground to find a wooden stick worthy enough to maintain their campfires. Bill's wrought iron campfire poker can be stowed away with other camping utensils where it will always be ready for them.

Bill is filling orders from all over the United States for his hand forged, one of a kind campfire pokers. Online orders have kept him very busy for the last two years. He enjoys making them and will continue doing so, as long as the demand persists.

The most popular campfire pokers he forges are unique in their handles. A Ram's Head handle, Basket Handle (most popular), Loop Handle and Cross Handle are all easily ordered at [url=http://www.blackironjunction.com/site/1623467/page/902329].

A blacksmith for over 17 years, Bill spends several days and weekends each year at blacksmith trade demonstrations. He learned the trade from other blacksmiths and by attending workshops. He was intrigued with all the creative techniques and discovered what he wanted to do. He enjoys meeting people and loves working with his hands.
