Go Public & raise capital for your business

Take your company public and access capital even in today's market. Investors still have capital to invest but they demand liquidity. Public companies offer them liquidity.

TEMECULA, CA, October 11, 2008 /24-7PressRelease/ -- Public companies offer investors liquidity because their stock can be sold on the open market. Investments in private companies do not provide liquidity. Its dead money.

Public companies have a valuation of 25 times net revenue. Private companies have a valuation of 4 times net revenue. See where I am going with this.

Public companies can use their stock as currency to make acquisitions, retain key employees, pay vendors and offer investors an exit where they can determine their profit point.

You can take your company public even if you are not generating revenue or have a large asset base. If you have a great product, service or idea that the investment community can rally behind you can go public and access capital.

Contact Michael N. Brette, J.D. for more information on how you can go public and access capital. Call 951-236-8473 or email: mikebrette@aol.com or visit www.mbcapital.net
