Social Security Numerology Announces Identity Information Website

Social Security Numerology announced today that it has launched a comprehensive website for providing consumers with information and resources about their social security number identity theft.

SAN FRANCISCO, CA, October 13, 2008 /24-7PressRelease/ -- Social Security Numerology made public today its website for informing consumers about how social security numbers work in the United States and how their protection contributes to identity security.

Millions of people each year receive solicitations online and in person that can put them at risk of identity theft, a crime which can cost consumers billions of dollars in aggregate. A critical piece of any identity thief's strategy is procuring the social security number of the victim.

Unfortunately, relatively few consumers really understand the nature of their social security numbers: who issues them, how they are selected, and what mechanisms exist to protect them from criminals.

"We've found that many, many people are underinformed about the strategies out there for securing this critical piece of information," said site founder Scott Hamilton. "We wanted to create a great resource to give them more information and power to protect themselves."

includes numerous tidbits of information, all related to identity theft and the social security system.

It also offers consumers links to outside sites, some run by the United States government, some run by legitimate credit watch agencies, all of which can help a user avoid the scourge of identity theft.

"We believe we're the best resource out there for help in this area," said Hamilton.
